Instructions by fax and/or e-mail attachment for all accounts

I/We commission you to execute orders received by fax and/or e-mail attachment, if they appear to have been provided with the signatures of the company's authorised representatives and the verification of these signatures does not present any discrepancies.

In the event that instructions are illegible, please contact me/us under telephone number . When this means of transmission is used you can verify the genuineness of the instructions only on the basis of the copy of the facsimile, which you receive. You do not have the original document available for verification purposes. You are therefore basically unable to recognise from the facsimile whether instructions have been forged – e.g. by a genuine signature from another document having been affixed – or falsified – e.g. by the recipient's details having been altered. This is only possible if the forgery or falsification is gross and can still be detected after the transmission.

I/We shall bear all loss or damage that arises out of the execution of forged or falsified instructions unless you failed to exercise the requisite care when checking the instructions. However, you are only obliged to check whether there is a gross forgery or falsification, which can still be detected after the transmission. If you breach this duty to check, your fault shall be taken into consideration proportionately.

With business customers:

Company stamp and signature of the person(s) entitled to represent the company

Place, Date

Signature(s) of the account holder(s)

Copy for the account holder

Version: 1.2.1 | Status 12.01.2016
